Question 17 â■ Natural Environment

Policy NE5: Trees and Woodland

Supplementary Guidance: Trees and Woodland

With regard to the above and in particular to the concept of the zone of influence - this does not fit with the British Standards.

The zone of influence concept is unreasonable and unfair and will no doubt cause unnecessary grief in the future unless it is removed from the new local development plan.

Trees in other people's gardens should not have an affect over what happens in your own garden. It's fair enough for a canopy of a tree to be the relevant factor but not the height to dictate what happens in terms of development.
